REPORT OF SCHOOL COMMITTEE.

Fellow Citizens: The closing of my official year brings again the duty of reporting to you the condition of our schools. It is expected that in connection with an estimate of our position and progress some suggestions, either in general terms or in the more minute particulars of school system and management, should be presented to you for your consideration.

I shall, as previously, refrain from a particularized report of each school and teacher; it is not deemed profitable to marshal before you individual excellence or defects, nor to afford room for invidious distinctions or fulsome praise. However, I may depart so far from this rule as to mention some instances of especial merit or noteworthy progress, this, as to a matter of imperative importance, as punctual and constant attendance. And here let me express my satisfaction upon the result in this direction, a pleasure that I know will be shared by you, since it is so indicative of awakened interest upon the part of pupils and the faithfulness of teachers.

The number of names upon the Roll of Honor as returned in the school registers is large. We find such proportions as eleven among fourteen, the whole number of scholars, who have not been absent or tardy during the term. In another school, a very small one, though one of the best, the names of four-fifths of its pupils were entered upon this honorable record; and it may be added that of these, two from one family had the same standing in the preceding year. In most of the Districts there has been an encouraging gain in this respect.

It appears that the smaller, more remote and scattered districts show a better attendance than do the village schools.

Perhaps the disadvantage connected with small schools has been over-estimated; certain it is that grant them equal opportunities in the way of teachers and length of terms, and the larger schools cannot afford to rest upon their laurels. These hints are thrown out in the hope that a generous rivalry may be awakened which cannot fail to accrue to the interests of all.

It is apparent that the Prudential Committees have been earnest in a determination to employ the best talent within their reach, and their endeavors have in such a large degree been crowned with success that I cannot forbear the expression of my congratulations.

The teachers having the charge of our schools have ranked high; none have failed, none but have achieved reasonable success. Many of those in your employ were such as had, by years of experience, established a reputation which words of mine can neither add to or detract from, and yet it would be strange indeed if all should be beyond criticism at every point.

Teachers are often not sufficiently prompt in arranging and classifying their schools. No time should be lost here. It is expected that the teacher will take this responsibility and at once ascertain (if a stranger) the position and scholarship of each pupil, and so grade the different classes that there be no loss of profit from students using books which they cannot understand, or pursuing studies for which previous attainments have not fitted them. In this matter, as in others involving the teacher's authority, their judgment must be decisive. Children are not to dictate for themselves, nor are parents to interfere or assume control always, of course, recognizing the right of protest, in lawful and proper manner. And allow me to say that the whole question of the teacher's authority ought to be better understood. In placing your children in the public schools you relinquish for the time being your immediate control over them; and, as regards their government, their studies and training, they are in the hands of the State, and for parents to intermeddle with the management of, or to disturb the school, is to render themselves liable to incur the penalty of law.

I speak plainly, for I have observed cases where great injury has been done by parents taking sides with their children as against the teacher, and this even before they had correctly informed themselves as to the merits of the case.

The child has been corrected for some perhaps trifling indecorum, unused to control or restraint, he is impudent and rebellious, and this requires further discipline. The instant the hour of dismissal arrives the scholar runs home, burning with bitterness, having the hope, often too well grounded, that he will find an advocate in the parent. His story is told and listened to, and the usual judgment is formed that "the teacher is not fit to keep school." Having arrived at this conclusion, he goes forth with unrestrained denunciations, and will be found during the remainder of the term with far more earnestness in the work of destruction than we could ever hope for in a better cause. These practices, contemptible as they appear, are not uncommon.

A word in relation to the condition of the school-houses may not be amiss. During the past year one house has been remodelled, and one, with work done in the preceding year, has been much improved, and some others have received slight repairs. The house in No. 11 needs attention; the school building in No. 5, which for years has been an "abomination of desolation, standing where it ought not," finds not at length "a generous friend or pitying foe," and before another year, will be numbered with the things of the past.

In my last report, I laid much stress upon the importance of the teaching of reading in our schools. I feel impelled to again call the attention of teachers to this matter. Some who have carried their pupils forward rapidly and satisfactorily in all other studies have failed, in some degree, in this. In these cases I readily perceived that reading had not been made a study in the proper sense of the word. Evidence of drill and training of the voice were not apparent. Sometimes the scholar was allowed to assume an incorrect position, and habits of carelessness and inattention went unrebuked. As the result of these defects the reading was, in a few instances, inexcusably poor.

Perhaps, conscious of no great degree of perfection in the art themselves, the teachers have been unwilling to instruct their pupils in the almost only practical way, that is, by example.

These remarks apply only to a few. In most of the schools the efforts in this branch were in proportion to its importance, and the results most satisfactory—in some instances exceedingly so. I suppose it to be the duty of the committee to demand a higher standard of qualification upon the part of teachers in this department.

The pernicious effects of an ill-taught and ill-governed school are so evident that all will, I think, agree that to employ a teacher, perhaps an entire stranger, as an experiment in the hope that all will be well, is a needless folly. It is the duty of the Prudential Committee to ascertain the standing and reputation of their applicants, so far as possible, before they are actually hired. I suspect that there is an unnecessary delicacy in regard to this. It is simply a matter of business, and should be so considered.

It has become fashionable in some quarters to decry the school system of our State; but we may safely say that there can be no plan which will, as some seem to suppose, turn out a manufactured product of educated men and women, merely as the result of the introduction of some particular system by the State or town; for great results we must depend upon great efforts and deep earnestness on the part of every one interested in the cause of education. In this way only have been achieved the great results of the past, and in this way only may we have hope of success in the future.

Then, in conclusion I would say, choose your best men for your Prudential Committees, insist upon their giving their most earnest attention to their duties; require of them that they employ only first-class, efficient, thorough-going instructors, and make your appropriations sufficiently generous that they may have the means to procure them. Expect of the Superintendent that he demand a high standard of qualification in those proposing to teach.

Provide your children with a suitable and abundant supply of books, and let them be procured promptly when needed; make your school-houses comfortable, pleasant and attractive; place in your school-rooms proper appliances, as maps, apparatus and books of reference. Personally interest yourselves in the welfare of the school; tolerate not for a moment any element of discord; and let the teacher be conscious of your fullest sympathy.

Do this, fellow-citizens, and you will not only have the satisfaction arising from duty done, but the assurance of an abundant reward.

JASON S. PERRY, School Committee.
